Data pipelines

Data engineering builds pipelines that move information between systems. A pipeline may extract data from a source, transform it, validate its quality, and load it into a destination.

Batch processing

Batch processing handles accumulated records in scheduled groups. It is useful for nightly reporting, historical analysis, and large transformations that do not require immediate results.

Data quality

Data quality checks can detect missing values, duplicate records, invalid formats, and inconsistent identifiers before information is used by downstream applications.